Water is a critical and influential input in the production of whiskey throughout the entire process, whether it be in the mashing/cooking of grain, proofing of unaged spirit into the barrel, or preparation for the final ABV to highlight that perfect expression. While we understand that whiskey alone cannot resolve the complex issues surrounding water sustainability, we do believe that each incremental action, however small, can play a role in helping solve the challenges faced. We are dedicated to playing our part in addressing them.

For the second installment of our Headwaters Series, we selected our San Luis Valley Rye – proofed down with purified water from the Rio Grande, the very river that nourishes the Colorado-grown grains we use. Our wheat, rye, and barley are all sourced from the San Luis Valley.

10% of proceeds from this bottle go directly to organizations dedicated to restoring and protecting the Rio Grande Basin in Colorado. These efforts support improved water quality, sustainable agricultural practices, riparian restoration, and the preservation of habitats for wildlife and aquatic species.

- ◆ TASTING NOTES: Aromas of sandalwood, cola syrup, and lemon zest. The palate is light and balanced, offering notes of pear, allspice, honey graham cracker, and citrus. The finish is dry and complex, with a oak sweetness.
- ◆ Mash Bill: 100% heirloom rye
- ◆ Aged: 4-8 years in new 53 gal, charred oak barrels

Ten Percent of sales from this special release will support organizations dedicated to conserving and protecting Colorado's water resources. While whiskey alone can't solve these complex issues, we're committed to doing our part.
